

Help Someone who Needs Relief from Stress Today!

Stress is part of everyday living. Clearly it is not the stress, but our response to it that is critical. Whether your body considers stress good or bad is largely a function of how well it can accommodate it. Think of your spinal cord as a guitar string—the greater the tension the higher the note. Your nervous system has “tone” as well. With each stressor, your body tightens up and the weakest joints of your spine are forced out of their normal position. Like the shrill notes from an over-tightened string, your body loses its capacity to respond resourcefully to the stress at hand.

While Chiropractic care cannot eliminate stress, its ability to reduce tension in your nervous system can help increase your capacity to accommodate it.
